The Galleria Umberto Di Marino is pleased to announce the first of a series of events to be held in the Spazio Maria Calderara in Milan, an industrial building restored to host the results of ongoing research in the field of fashion. The series of exhibitions, set up with the support and passion of the collectors Maria Calderara and Novelio Furin, is designed to provide opportunities for free artistic and curatorial experimentation linked to the main themes of the gallery's scheduling, in the wake of events already organised in Naples last year in spaces not usually intended for contemporary art.

On Friday 31 March 2017, a conversation beyond space and time will take place between Luca Francesconi and Vettor Pisani, a project entitled Mascaret (with Vettor Pisani), in which objects and semantic fields become the subject of a lively debate thanks to their evocative force.

By anticipating the recent and, unfortunately, belated interest of international art criticism in the work of Vettor Pisani, Francesconi has explored common ground with his artistic practice over the years. He considers archetypal symbolism and philosophical speculation on the transcendental nature of matter, the mixture of sacred and profane, the overlap of birth and death, and the intertwining of art and art criticism. Through an interest in alchemy and the tendency to quote from the work of other artists, on which the mysticism and instinctive attachment to nature of both artists draw, mankind finds a heroic (or antiheroic) dimension by moving through the dark matter of the universe.

The post-modernist approach of Vettor Pisani, together with the semantic removal of iconography and traditional mythology, have always revealed the cracks in Eurocentric culture, whose boundaries and limits we now fully understand. The same short-sightedness has led to neglect of the prophetic force of his work which is now finally highlighted in this exhibition. Francesconi is already moving through these ruins, drawing on popular culture, crafts and naïve art in order to re-establish contact with reality through a reflection based on the metaphysics of matter.

At the end of the creative process, in both cases, mankind proves to be a "creole" figure, as underlined by Francesconi in the text accompanying the exhibition, indicating this result as the greatest legacy that this maestro of our contemporary world: "Pisani offers a figure that is no longer human, but made of creole living matter, without any cultural dominance". The human body once again merges with the eternal living flow of objects, in all its authentic naturalness, despite obtaining this new state through the extremism of an artificial process. Like a tidal bore or mascaret, the leading edge of the tide that travels up a river attracted by the magnetic force of the moon, the practices of the two artists are designed to reveal the most unknown part of what is representable.
